Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1854 edition. Excerpt: . . . 30. We perceive by the construction of a common chord that it consists of the following concords, viz. : --A major third, minor third, and perfect fifth. 31. In a major common chord, the major third is formed by the fundamental note and its third, and the minor third by the third and fifth. In the minor common chord these intervals are reversed. Moreover we see these chords take their names, major and minor, from the names of their thirds. 32. It has been already observed that the octave note to the fundamental may be added; indeed, octaves must be added when the composition is written in four distinct parts. 33. By the addition of the octave to the fundamental note, the number of concords is doubled, as may be seen by this example: Here we have three perfect concords, viz. : --an octave between C and C, a perfect fifth C and G, perfect fourth G and C, the octave note; and three imperfect concords, viz. a major third between (the fundamental) C and E, minor third E and G, minor sixth E and C the octave. 34. Similarly in the minor common chord--There are the same three perfect concords as in the major common chord, and there are three imperfect concords, viz. a minor third between (the fundamental) C and b E, 35. We also perceive that those imperfect concords which are major in the one species of common chord are minor...
